Leadership, Law and Governance

Leadership, law, and governance together form a trilateral operand that underscores our organization's core philosophy, defines its viability, and supports those key architectures and frameworks that guide its endeavours.

Acronym

Prallagon is an acronym for the 'practice of leadership, law, and governance'. It fuses leadership with a moral effort, facilitates adherence to law to maintain social order and stabilize human affairs, and integrates ethical performance criteria into systems of governance. The trilateral is a unified component whose function is to incorporate the intent for justice in all undertakings.

Functions

Each unit functions independently with varying degrees of proficiency in society. Difficulties arise when just one unit falls below optimum performance, which also impacts the operating efficiency of its fellow units. As this occurs, justice becomes endangered that portends dire circumstances for any society. This could cause societal instability. If not controlled, a progressive breakdown in law and order could occur resulting in progressive societal dysfunction and civil strife.

Performance

To maintain viability and carry out its intent to promote justice as the viable element for societal progress, the trilateral operand recognizes that each unit housed within its framework must be in contiguous synchronization if it is to achieve the near or optimum performance needed to generate the synergy required to ease much of societal burdens.

Public Policy

The trilateral operand is not effective as a standalone concept but is best used as a basis for planned strategic undertakings detailed within a cohesive global public policy framework, a framework whose focused intent is to weaken nefarious social underpinnings, implement major innovations in education and training that have a global outreach, and devise means to ensure that concepts of justice are reigning criteria.
