

The Field Advisory

The internal operating structure of the Field Advisory is open-ended, the group decides how it will perform its duties.

Aptly applies principles of consultation to make group discussions.

The Field Advisory unit hosts and receives input from designated TeamMx virtual 'field' Regional Coordinators responsible for collaborating across and within assigned geographic locales to work with stakeholders on issues related to cohesive global public policy, and how it can be crafted to advance human development in a global context. The advisory reviews and documents information received, completes analysis, and reports its findings with summarised conclusions for internal review through designated channels to the Directorate.

The Field Advisory functions non-administratively, meaning that it operates without 'power of authority', but acts in the capacity as an exponent of consultation, the primary process inclusive to Prallagon's core features.

The Field Advisory along with Regional Coordinators establish an interrelated working relationship based on mutual trust and uncompromising support. Information received from coordinators is considered factual, resource-based, and represents ground level coordinated effort by them and their contacts.

The primary functions of the Field Advisory is to assess, inform and advise, both up-channel and to those designated to receive such information. Channels are kept clear for quick access to information often needed quickly to support collaborative efforts and decision-making.

The Field Advisory functions with a team leader, who aptly applies principles of consultation to group discussions and in the process engages principles of facilitative leadership; and the advisory secretary records all group approved activities.

The internal operating structure of the Field Advisory is open-ended, meaning that the group must decide if some functions are assigned to a particular group member(s). It is up to the group to decide its direction and what is required to fulfil its duties and to advance advisory operations.

Engages principles of facilitative leadership to get the best possible from group members.
